

Daniel Schauer, Sales Manager Export

I began my vocational training as an industrial manager, combined with a degree in business administration from a technical college, at a company that manufactures forklifts. Only a few months into my training course, however, the company declared bankruptcy; I found out about SAG during my subsequent online research. And then everything happened very fast. Everything was just right: after only two interview rounds, I was employed – even though I was applying outside of the regular recruitment period.

Besides the innovative electronic products, I especially like the healthy mixture of senior and junior employees at SAG. This encourages lively discussion during meetings and team conferences, and both sides benefit. They have always been extremely helpful and beneficial for my personal development. I strongly believe that this mixture of young and seasoned staff is essential for the long-term market success of any business.

And I really appreciate the friendly, relaxed atmosphere within the team. The flat hierarchies and rapid decision-making processes, which always take the team members' opinions into account, contribute to a positive and motivating working environment. Being allowed to work autonomously and with a high degree of responsibility have shown me that my contribution is being appreciated.

As an employer, SAG is strongly characterised by the support and professional development opportunities offered to its employees. In addition to numerous training and education programmes in the field of sales, rhetoric and foreign languages, I have been able to complete my MBA successfully. I have since been promoted to deputy head of the export department.
